

Robertson Cliffs Hike Outing Report May 18, 2019 By Chuck Miller

On a day where the weather forecast predicted periods of rain – we received only a sprinkle and lots of wildflowers and no blackflies. 20 Sault Naturalists took to the beautiful hills of Robertson Cliffs in search of wildflowers, birds and good times.

Round-lobed hepatic (Anemone americana)

Along the way we found a note from others who had enjoyed the scenery and left a birch bark note to fellow hikers.

Tom responded with what we were all thinking “ This is a beautiful spot to be enjoyed by many people.”

Round-lobed hepatic (Anemone americana)

Trout lily (Erythronium americanum)

Dutchman's breeches (Dicentra cucullaria)

Spring beauty (Claytonia caroliniana)

Wildflowers were in abundance and everyone had a nice day.

We stopped by the waterfalls along “Ila’s Trail” on the way down the hill.

It was one of those days where if you were inside you might think the weather was too bad to do anything outdoors but if you were outside you knew it was a great day to be outside in nature.

For more photos: Robertson Cliffs